OT621-1 Critical Issues in Old Testament Studies

Classroom 4

2–5pm Mondays

This course begins with a survey of the history of the discipline of Old Testament studies. This survey lays the foundation for the primary focus of the course, an evaluation of modern historical-critical methods of interpretation. Students will engage critical approaches to the authorship of the Pentateuch and Isaiah and apply what has been learned to books such as Daniel and Zechariah. Special attention will be given to the production of prophetic books, textual features of ancient Near Eastern literature, and the doctrine of Scripture. Significant analysis of both secondary literature and the OT texts themselves leading to presentations, critical reviews, and student presentations will form the bulk of the coursework.

4 credits Instructor: Dr. Michael Thigpen Prerequisite: None

Note: Course is only open to students admitted to the Master of Theology program.
